

After reading the article in the Washington Post this week, I am revolted by Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to make their stations air an obviously anti-Kerry documentary during the time before the election. This is a frightening and blatant example of media consolidation dangers.

I am repulsed by the direction the airwaves are taking. Having fewer true venues for area/community media and instead, control of the airwaves by mega-media ventures, is an example of why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. Thank you.
